From public domain within three months before the investigation date, a customer reported that the call center advised them to bring their old, discontinued camera in for service and confirmed they had the necessary parts after checking the model and serial numbers. However, upon arrival, the service center staff informed them they did not have the parts and could not assist. The staff dismissed the issue, attributing it to a misunderstanding with the call center. This caused frustration and wasted the customer's morning. The customer expressed relief that they have mostly switched to Sony equipment.

One month before the investigation date, another customer reported that they bought a brand-new faulty printer and found the after-sales service extremely disappointing. They were told they had to wait about 10 working days for inspection and had to send the printer to the company's HQ themselves, despite the advertised on-site exchange service. The customer advised others to avoid the brand, suggesting there are much better options available. They rated the service very poorly, calling it "fourth world service".

On 11-02-2026, a direct interview with subject company's customers by Confirmis recorded that one of its customers highly recommended Subject Company as a technology partner due to their remarkable expertise, reliability and commitment to delivering high-quality solutions. Throughout their collaboration, they have consistently demonstrated innovation, meeting deadlines, and exceeding expectations in terms of both deliverables and communication. Subject company's collaborative approach, coupled with customer's dedication to customer satisfaction, makes them an invaluable asset for any organization seeking a trusted and reliable technology partner.
